

UNITY

WISDOM FROM THE LITERATURE

STEP 1

"Who cares to admit complete defeat? Practically no one, of course. Every natural instinct cries out against the idea of personal powerlessness...But upon entering A.A. we soon take quite another view of this absolute humiliation. We perceive that only through utter defeat are we able to take our first steps toward liberation and strength. Our admission of personal powerlessness finally turns out to be firm bedrock upon which happy and purposeful lives may be built." (12 and 12, p. 21)

STEP 2

"Being restored to sanity meant giving up our rationalizations that our lies and sexual acting out hurt no one. We began to accept the stark truth that sex or romance could not fill the hole in our souls. We recognized that the 'next one' would yield the same results as the last one, or the last one hundred. We acknowledged that we were not all-knowing, all-powerful, all anything...Step Two was the point in our work where we saw that we needed help to relinquish our insane behaviors.." (SIA 1-3, p. 61)

Acceptance vs. Resignation

Member Share

Recently I found myself in spiritual crisis. Even after years in the program and much experience with God's love and kindness, life's circumstances changed and left me grieving my losses, full of despair and hopelessness. I felt powerless over my despairing and obsessive thoughts, powerless over the pain, powerless over the questions in my head. My sponsor and others gently guided me toward acceptance, but I continued to struggle. Instead of acceptance I found myself in resignation, and I've come to see that the two are total opposites.

Resignation is the rejection of step two. It is looking at my circumstances and letting them dictate what I believe about God's character. Acceptance, on the other hand, is looking first at the God of my understanding and viewing my circumstances through the lens of God's character.

Acceptance builds trust, but resignation fosters bitterness. Before recovery, I felt resigned to my life and saw life's ups and downs as indicators of God's pleasure or displeasure with me. Recovery is teaching me something new, but slipping into that old thinking began to harden my heart and make me a bitter person. Beginning to choose the path of acceptance based on God's love and goodness toward me is rebuilding trust in my higher power.

Although acceptance is about letting go, I've also come to believe that acceptance is an active step, not passive. Resignation is passive. Resignation turns me into a victim of a God who doesn't care. Choosing to accept and trust often requires great action on my part. Sometimes it is mental action – choosing to release lies and negative thoughts, and choosing to hold on to truth about God and myself. Choosing to believe what is true and release negative lies cultivates hope. Sometimes acceptance requires physical action. Some days I have to ask myself, "What would I do in this moment if I truly believed that God is for me?" It might be leaving my house, making a phone call, getting to a meeting, reading the literature, reaching out to a sponsee, or being of service.

Acceptance reminds me that I am not a victim; sobriety and recovery have restored my power of choice. And most importantly, it reminds me that I am loved by my Higher Power who is with me through all of life's painful circumstances, who has a good plan for my life, and who can be trusted.
